

SOCIETY

THE week has been a characteristic one for June in Washington. Many weddings, some departures, and a few unexpected marriages. The most unexpected of the last named was that of Miss Mary Chew to Gardner Hubbard Bell, which was celebrated by the two parties most concerned without the aid and co-operation of either family, last Tuesday, in Baltimore. Although the announcement of their engagement would have caused little or no surprise, it was not suspected that the young people were contemplating matrimony while the bride was yet in her teens and the bridegroom only just passed his majority. However, the families are not at all unhappy over it, for each liked the idea but thought the couple were much too young for the serious cares of business and the home. So it is a happy issue that there is no antipathy on either side. It is expected that the truant bride and bridegroom will return here this week and map out their future business and social career, and the only things lacking in the whole arrangement are the wedding bells, the orange blossoms, and the bridal gifts.

The explosion of surprise which this wedding announcement occasioned reminded society very generally of the last time this bridegroom was very much in the limelight. It was on the occasion of his vacation visit home from college several years ago, when he was an attractive young fellow on the qui vive for excitement and innocent fun. The Bachelor's Christmas cotillion came in the nick of time to save his vacation from being tame. His sisters, now Mrs. Julian Ripley and Mrs. Granville R. Fortescue, conceived the idea of getting even with a few people by introducing several times-millions to him in the form of a blonde schoolgirl friend, an orphan and a visitor in Washington for only a few days. So they dressed their college boy brother up in the prettiest of pink silk frocks, blonde wig, and French-heeled slippers, obtained the necessary card for their "guest" and hid to the back of Washington's balls. Their hidden friend was an instantaneous success. The men swarmed about "her" pink-silk-freshness. She was many times taken down to supper, just how many and what kind of sweet phrases were poured into her ear only two people will ever know, the one who said them and Gardner Hubbard Bell, who kept the secret of these bachelors well. Caught unaware at the supper table by a particularly good joke, he forgot his lady-like voice and perpetrated a natural, good-natured "blunder" and instantly there was a stampede—the bachelors for the ball room and the belle of the ball for the dressing room. Here there was a greater embarrassment, for no guest with a voice like that could properly enter the ladies' dressing room. But one sister arrived in the nick of time, hustled her brave brother into a cab and shouted "Home!" to the coachman. The bachelors lagged during the last two hours of that bachelors' cotillion, but the fun of it all has never been forgotten. The young people of the Bell family have never had much to say of the escapade since then, but had their fun out of it just the same.

Another affair de coeur of much interest which occasioned great surprise among a large circle was the announcement of the engagement of Miss Anna Ewing Cockrell, daughter of former Senator Cockrell, of Missouri, to the Minister from Greece, Mr. Cornilias, one of the popular and picturesque bachelors of the diplomatic corps. Miss Cockrell has been a prominent figure in the diplomatic set ever since her debut in society from the schoolroom. She emerged from a schoolgirl to an official hostess almost in the twinkling of an eye. When she was graduated her mother had been dead for some time and her older sister had been married some time, and she at once assumed the duties of a Senatorial hostess, which she discharged with grace, tact, and success. Her father's retirement from the Senate had no effect upon the popularity of the young hostess, for she has remained quite as busy socially as she ever was in official life. Miss Cockrell's marriage to the Minister will take place on July 6, and they will sail for Greece on July 7.

The first of July will see almost all of the society people in whatever quarters they will occupy for the summer. The family of Gen. Medore Crawford have already gone to East Gloucester, Mass., and are established there for the remainder of the season. Mrs. Frederick Tyson, of Baltimore, one of the most delightful of Washington's winter colony, will be in a few days to her summer apartments at the Hawthorn Inn at East Gloucester. She has been in her Baltimore home for some weeks, after having a delightful winter in Washington, and spending the last few weeks of her stay here, recuperating from a serious illness. Miss Mary Alsop Fryder will join her there next week. The Cabinet circle is scattered to the four winds. Mrs. MacVeagh, wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, was the last Cabinet hostess to leave Washington. She is now on her way to her summer home at Dublin, N. H., where the Secretary will join her on Thursday.
